- In that regards, Egypt is well positioned to take a leading role in promoting third country cooperation, mobilizing Arab investors and Arab Funds and technology and equipment providers from developed countries, which will be supported by the huge presence of Egyptian companies throughout Africa, low cost of its value added inputs, and free trade agreements with only 35% to 45% local content requirement.
- Ongoing examples include the new Tanzania dam and a host of power plants, roads, industrial, agriculture, health and touristic projects, all of which are with foreign partners.
- Moreover, Gulf investors along with Arab and Islamic development banks and funds, are now looking into Africa along with a host of bilateral, regional and multilateral donors and development banks.
